“ David and I were best buddies when we were pre-teen - practically inseparable. I was going through some bad emotional problems because of my family's poverty situation and I was acting out a lot, probably to get attention. David sort of followed my lead and I got us both into a lot of trouble that cost our families money. We vandalized a house up the street from Grandma Harper. After that, David and I were kept apart. I guess I didn't really start being a semi-good person until I was 40. I loved David like a brother but only saw him two or three times after that at reunions. Ha, we never said a word about our sins. He will be missed by a lot of people but it's still the same for me because I've missed him (and all my cousins) my entire life. David was truly one of the very best ever.

Peace and Love to all of you,
