As the family grew, they moved frequently across Oklahoma, adapting to the demands of Max's career as a truck driver. This profession allowed him to make lifelong friends thanks to his rambunctious and humorous personality.

Max enjoyed building hotrods as well as hunting and fishing. He relished in storytelling, often captivating his audience with tales of his younger days, including memorable moments like drinking moonshine with Linda's grandfather. His life was marked by adventurous travels in his 18-wheeler and his love for family and friends.

In remembrance of Max's love for the family dogs he cherished throughout his life, the family requests that contributions be made in his honor to the Oklahoma Humane Society at OKHumane.org/Donate.

She was an amazing cook for the athletes at UCO, where can worked as a student. Max used to say, “my mother fed him when he was in college and now he feeds me the spiritual food from the word of God “ looking forward to a reunion with Max and Pearl and Ken.
